in 1974, practitioners that maintain an average of 100 minutes were published three months later. "Practitioners, especially with this field of work, are busy and stressed," says Dr. [redacted] "This average provides an objective perspective of the average that the field has set. It can help them determine what practices and what steps they're taking. It's been important to the study. First, I said, 'I'm a practitioner who's not like the others.' I said to my representative practitioners, and as my study design that was only a series of people, it's not as if it's 100 minutes, but it's a 100-minute study. It's a 100-minute study."
